Congress Entertained at White House Last

by hundreds of visitors last night at the congressional levee at the White House. The cold weather did not seem to have deterred any who had planned to accept the Kinley, as the mansion was thronged the entire evening, and the line of incoming guests kept up till the usual hour. much cannot be said in praise of the arrangements, both for the entrance and departure of the company. Everything was done to facilitate their easy progress from even the outside gates, the rule requiring entrance to the grounds by the west gate only being rescinded, so that no person was exposed to the biting cold a moment longer than necessary. It was a hard night on the doorkeepers and the policemen stationed about the entrance and grounds, and the excellent service rendered by each man was the theme of many a word of well-de-about the entrance and grounds, and the excellent service rendered by each man was the theme of many a word of well-deserved commendation.

The east room was as usual a flower poem, each mantel and window recess being banked with beautiful blossoms. Ferns and vines gave fresh beauty to the corridor, and the west stairway was all a-bloom with massed azaleas. The brilliancy of the company in the blue room made all else forgotten there.

President and Mrs. McKinley had receiving with them Mrs. Hay, Mrs. Gage, Mrs. Root, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Hitchcock and Miss Wilson. Mrs. McKinley, when she entered the blue room with the President, gave a friendly nod and smile to the little group of women writers, who pre-empt for the early part of each of these receptions a part of the space about the "golden gate." Her gown was a superb black velvet, the cascade effect of a deep fall of lace on the corsage being continued down to the front of the skirt. With this gown her diamond necklace shone with increased brilliancy. She carried a bouquet of Hiles of the valley. Mrs. Hay wore a cream Chantilly lace. Mrs. Gage was in black velvet and point lace. Mrs. Root wore a silver spangled black net and many diamonds. Mrs. Smith was in a light satin, trimmed in lace. Mrs. Hitchcock wore mauve and white striped moire and lace, and Miss Wilson, who is again in enjoyment of all the gayeties, was prettily dressed in pink silk with shirred tule trimmings. Miss Long, who accompanied her father, Secretary Long, and Miss Griggs, who was with the Attorney General, were back of the line, with the large party invited to participate in the reception from that point of vantage.

Miss Susan B. Anthony and Mrs. Potter Palmer were the most observed of their sex during their progress through the plue room, as well as later, when they promenaded through the east room and corridors. Mrs. Palmer's black satin princesd ress had a quantity of rich silver spangled trimming, and with the numerous diamonds and pearls worn in tiara and necklace made

The charity ball last night, under the auspices of the Southern Relief Society, was a splendid success. The Rifles' Hall was thronged, the decorations in yellow draperles and vines of the night before were in place, the dance music was perfect, and the belles could be counted by the dozens. The reception committee, with Miss Virginia Miller, president of the society, at its head, were the hostesses of the occasion. Standing with Miss Miller, who was richly dressed in black lace over white satin, were Mrs. M. A. Ballinger, Mrs. J. T. Callaghan, Mrs. E. M. Gadsden, Mrs. Arthur Fendall, Mrs. E. Rust Smith and Mrs. E. W. Ayres.

In the group of young ladies who were assistant hostesses, were Miss Fendall, Miss Grace McKinley, Miss Duncan, Mrss Gordon, Miss Winchester of Georgia, Miss Denby, Miss Florence Beale, Miss Grace Dunlop, Miss Florence Beale, Miss Grace Dunlop, Miss Forence Beale, Miss Grace Dunlop, Miss Forence Beale, Miss Grace Dunlop, Miss Florence Beale, Miss Cuthbert of St. Louis, Miss Upshur, granddaughter of Rear Admiral Upshur; Miss Esther Gordon, Miss McAtee, Miss Cook, Miss Powell, Miss Paschal, Miss Riley, Miss O'Fharrell, Miss Seville, Miss Riley, Miss Walker of Norfolk, Miss Tucker, Miss Baker, Miss Sallie Young, Miss Caperton, Miss Lutz, Miss Marshall, Miss Tucker, Miss Baker, Miss Sallie Young, Miss Caperton, Miss Lutz, Miss Marshall, Miss Fegram, Miss Ryan, and Miss Kennedy of Georgia.

Mr. Robert E. Lee was chairman of the floor committee, which was composed of the members of the Confederate Veterans' Association and the Southern Relief Society, both organizations contributing to the success of the evening.

Down stairs the supper table was supplied with all manner of substantials and dainties, contributed by well-wishers of the charity.
